The thought may help us in regard to all the temptations of our life, even the most hidden and solltary. It may help us to do battle with our despondency and sadness, with our restlessness and resentment, with the perverting and corrupting inisery of ambition. We must be watchful and uncompromising if the self-consecration is to do its work. One sin alone indulged, condoned, domesticated, may spoil it all, may cripple all our hope of helpfulness, may baffle the willingness of God to us in His work for others. "For their sakes I consecrate myself." This, then, is our constant hope, that God will so cleanse and purify our hearts that they may not hinder the transmission to others of that light and truth which issue from His presence. For that hope we would cast out all that defiles and darkens us, so that, through all our unworthiness, something of His brightness and peace may be known to men--Francis Paget.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN ARCHITECT.

It is open to you to choose what you shall become. For it is open to you to choose what you shall love, to what you shall give your heart, what or whom you will take as Master and You can hide away in your heart for a while, if you will, an unworthy love, a false life ideal. No one will know that it is there, for your outward life will not disclose it. But with the same inexorable precision as that which marks the course of development in plant or animal, you will more like that which you hide in you heart. You possess it now, and you old it locked from view. But some time it will possess you, and then you cannot hide it. O friend, I beg you, in God first in your heart. Love Him above all, that you may grow to be like Him.
